PITTSBURG DRAFT CONSIDERED BLUFF

Claim on Altizer Club in Hillebrand Case.

Pittsburg's claim to Altizer, the young Lancaster shortstop who has made good so far with Washington with re-markable success, is not taken seriously by the Washington club's officials. year, according to their version, but the louis P. Shoemaker, 612 14th st. nw local people think they can prove that it was done merely as a favor and as a covering-up scheme for the benefit of Manager O'Neill, of the Springfield We recommend this home as being of good value. Pittsburg is digging up a phoneey claim to Altizer to use as a club over the head of the Washington management to induce it to let go its valid claim to Doc Hillebrand, the Princeton star who signed with the Nationals, but has for two years refused to join the club, claiming that his business interests in the West were too important to abandon for the diamond. Hillebrand assured Jake Stahl last spring that if he played in a major league this season he would rather be bath; hot water heat; with Washington than any other team and would play with it or none, so that it would seem that Pittsburg is stirring call. FOR OUR LIS up trouble for nothing.

"Snake" Deal, the first baseman on the Lancaster team, in the Tri-State League, with whom Washington has been flirting, is one of the best, if not the best, goal throwers in basketball in the country. He is a six-footer and strongly built and is famous for his reach. He has been batting round .370 in the outlaw organization and leads it in stolen bases, with a record of 21 in 31 games. His speed on his feet is said to be remarkable considering his size.

Deal, although he leads the regular players with the stick in the Tri-State, is not much of a long distance hitter, and ranks rather low among them, but the man who is there with the single more than one-third of the times he goes to bat is the boy who will accomplish more in the long run than the slugger who is not so reliable, but hits it extra hard when he does make his sporadic attacks on the pitcher. His fielding average is .985.

Manager Stahl, in his scout through the outlaw territory, tried to land Pitcher Stony McGlynn, of the York team, but failed. McGlynn has captured ten and lost two games.

It may be mentioned in passing that Uncle Nick Young decided about fifteen years ago, and the decision has been accepted ever since, that when a double-header is played the first game is the extra, or "bargain day" game.

double-header is played the first game is the scheduled game, and the second is the extra, or "bargain day" game. This was a natural conclusion, as one of the primary objects and intentions of a league is to play off its schedule, and if rain or something else were to intervene to prevent the second game, there would be another break in the schedule, but let that pass.
